

Verizon employees and Virginia residents are getting Scrooged.

This holiday season, there's a new Scrooge in Virginia — the management at Verizon.

Despite the fact that Verizon made $4.3 billion in profits this year, they're abandoning Virginia consumers and cutting hundreds of jobs.

These are jobs that would help build Virginia's communications network, expand broadband to our communities and maintain quality service that we all need.

This means more bad news for consumers, who could face longer delays for repairs, service and installation.

And it means that our communities will lose quality, home-town jobs, jobs that help support schools, community organizations and religious groups.

We need a company that will help lead the economic recovery, not cut back when quality service and hometown, quality jobs are needed the most.

Tell Verizon: Job cuts threaten customers, employees and communities.
